

DR. RICK HALPERIN

Director, SMU Human Rights Education Program

My entire life of 58 years has been spent defending and advocating the idea that there is no such thing as a lesser person, and that all persons, regardless of whatever they have done, still have and remain worthy of their inherent dignity and must not, for any reason, be tortured or be put to death.

I was exposed to the realities of segregation at an early age and I saw firsthand the terrible consequences of its legacy. As a high school student in 1966, I spent three months in Santiago, Chile where I witnessed abject poverty, human misery and violent political upheaval. I was fortunate to spend my sophomore year (1968-1969) in college at the Sorbonne in Paris, France. On January 16, 1969, I was an eyewitness to the self-immolation of the Czech medical student, Jan Palach in Prague, Czechoslovakia. A few weeks later while traveling through London, England, I heard about Amnesty International. I joined AIUSA in 1971 when they opened an office in Washington, D.C.

Since 1972, I have been actively involved in the effort and struggle to abolish the death penalty in the United States. I work with many anti-death penalty (abolitionist) organizations, capital defense attorneys, representatives of various communities of faith, newspaper editorial boards, victims' rights groups, members of the families of the condemned, and many death row inmates throughout the country. I regularly visit the condemned and have been on international missions to monitor the facilities in which they are incarcerated. In 1998, I witnessed an execution in the death chamber in Huntsville, Texas. I now convey that experience both in my classroom and to human rights audiences, which I regularly address. My passion for activism has led me to participate in numerous non-violent civil disobedience demonstrations, some of which have resulted in my being arrested and jailed.

In addition to my work against the death penalty, I am also active in other areas of human rights. I work with a variety of organizations which seek improvements in human rights on behalf of women, children, gays and lesbians, indigenous persons, survivors of torture, imprisoned political prisoners of conscience and human rights defenders, journalists, and healthcare professionals who are under non-stop assault by governments around the world.

It became my singular pursuit to become very active in the global human rights movement and community and to pursue my career as a human rights educator. Since 1985, I have been actively working in the field of human rights education. I have helped to develop appropriate curricula and programs which foster the spread of human rights at all levels of higher learning. As a member of the history department and Director of the Human Rights Education Program at Southern Methodist University, I have been able to offer graduate and undergraduate courses in human rights. Many of my students are preparing for law school and are just now coming to grapple with ideas of law, human rights, justice, responsibility, victims and perpetrators, and, impunity and reconciliation.

My students also involve themselves in working directly with these issues, volunteering to work throughout the semester with capital defense attorneys, refugee and asylum-oriented organizations and attorneys, and the Dallas Center for Survivors of Torture.

As a past chairperson of the Board of Directors of Amnesty International USA and the Texas Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty, I still travel widely and speak and monitor a variety of human rights concerns around the world. I welcome the opportunity to work with my peers in furtherance of this cause and its ideals - namely, to help bring about a world without torture, without suffering, without executions and without victims.
